From Councilor Katie Koivisto

A Season of Gratitude

The upcoming November election will provide another historical moment for the City of Lehi, the State of Utah, and the United States of America. Lehi City will be voting on the retention of its Justice Court Judge, Morgan Cummings. The State of Utah has an auditor, a treasurer, and a state senator up for election. One of Alpine School Districts board members, and a few propositions are sprinkled on the ballot as well. However, what appears to be the most controversial topic at hand, is that of the election of President for the US of A.

I possess a house of division. My husband and I have very different political view points. We've had lengthy, in-depth, conversations about each of the hot ticket items that will appear on the upcoming ballot. At the end of the day, we agree to disagree with each other. However, we do agree with two fundamental keystones. First, the forefathers of this nation were guided by deity in establishing the rights and laws that this country is so richly blessed with. Second, fear is not associated with said Spirit.

It is so very easy to get caught up in the emotions of a political arena. Fear has been, and will continue to be, fodder used by mainstream media sources. As each of us do our research on the topics and candidates at hand, I would encourage the notion to find the positive elements that each opponent possess. Try not to allow negative feelings, such as fear and anger, dictate any part of that decision making process.

I am a firm believer that faith without works is dead. Last November, during city council elections, Lehi City had the second lowest voter turn out rate in all of Salt Lake and Utah County combined. How are we expected to have the same faith that our forefathers had, if we're not willing to put the necessary work in of voting? John Lewis said it best, "The right to vote is precious, almost sacred. People fought for it, bled for it, died for it. Honor their sacrifice. Vote."

Water Department

News

As the weather has started to cool and Fall is upon us, it is time for homeowners to turn off their connection to the City's pressurized irrigation. The Lehi City irrigation system provides water to the City's fire hydrants. Because of this, the system is active year-round. Property owners are responsible for turning irrigation water on at the point of the City connection in the spring and off in the fall. We recommend you turn it off by October 15. Check out our YouTube channel for a video from our Water Department with instructions on how to turn your irrigation water off at your home: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=sH5thAW8hL4&feature=youtu.be>.

If you have additional questions, you are welcome to call the Water Department at 385-201-1700.
